Contents Volume 15:1 March 1992

Thompson, E., Palacios, A. & Varela, F. J. Ways of coloring: Comparative color vision as a case study for cognitive science 1

Open Peer Commentary

Akins, K. A. & Lamping, J. More than mere coloring: The art of spectral vision 26
Averill, E. W. A limited objectivism defended 27
Backhaus, W. & Menzel, R. Conclusions from color vision of insects 28
Ben-Ze'ev, A. Problems with explaining the perceptual environment 30
Broackes, J. Nonreductionism, content and evolutionary explanation 31
Clark, A. Reductionism and subjectivism defined and defended 32
Dannemiller, J. L. Color is as color does 33
Davidoff, J. What is a colour space? 34
Dennett, D. C. Hitting the nail on the head 35
Feldman, J. A. Enactivist vision 35
Finkelstein, M. A. Psychophysical modeling: The link between objectivism and subjectivism 36
Gouras, P. Multivariant color vision 37
Hardin, C. L. Color for pigeons and philosophers 37
Hilbert, D. Comparative color vision and the objectivity of color 38
Hurlbert, A. The view of a computational animal 39
Jacobs, G. H. Data and interpretation in comparative color vision 40
Kinnear, P. R. Color enactivism: A return to Kant? 41
Kondrashev, S. L. Ethological and ecological aspects of color vision 42
Levine, J. Objectivism-subjectivism: A false dilemma? 42
Lia, B. Ontogeny and ontology: Ontophyletics and enactive focal vision 43
Maier, E. & Burkhardt, D. In search of common features of animals' color vision systems and the constraints of environment 44
Maloney, L. T. A mathematical framework for biological color vision 45
Matthen, M. Color vision: Content versus experience 46
Mausfeld, R. J., Niederée, R. M. & Heyer, K. D. On possible perceptual worlds and how they shape their environments 47
McGilvray, J. A. Colors really are only in the head 48
Neumeyer, C. On perceived colors 49
Reeves, A. Areas of ignorance and confusion in color science 49
Shepard, R. N. What in the world determines the structure of color space? 50
Skarda, C. A. Ecological subjectivism? 51
Steele, K. M. Confusing structure and function 52
Stoerig, P. & Cowey, A. Wavelength processing and colour experience 53
van Brakel, J. The ethnocentricity of colour 53
Wagemans, J. & de Weert, C. M. M. Ways of coloring the ecological approach 54

Authors' Response

Thompson, E., Palacios, A. & Varela, F. J. On the ways to color 56

Kenrick, D. T. & Keefe, R. C. Age preferences in mates reflect sex differences in human reproductive strategies 75

Open Peer Commentary

Alley, T. R. Perceived age, physical attractiveness and sex differences in preferred mates' ages 92
Bayer, B. M. On the separation of reproduction from mating preferences 92
Borkenau, P. Age preferences: The crucial studies have yet to be done 93
Broude, G. J. The May-September algorithm meets the 20th century actuarial table 94
Byrne, D. & Kelley, K. Differential age preferences: The need to test evolutionary versus alternative conceptualizations 96
Crawford, C. Sex differences in age preferences for mates: Primary and secondary predictions from evolutionary theory 97
Dewsbury, D. A. Continuing a long tradition 98
Dupré, J. Arbitrariness and bias in evolutionary speculation 98
Funder, D. C. Toward a nonarbitrary social psychology 99
Glenn, N. D. Toward a more complete integration of evolutionary and other perspectives on age preferences in mates 100
Grammer, K. Variations on a theme: Age dependent mate selection in humans 100
Harpending, H. Age differences between mates in southern African pastoralists 102
Levinger, G. & Kirkpatrick, L. A. Biological versus social psychological bases of mate selection 103
Lippa, R. On building bridges between social psychology and evolutionary biology 104
Mealey, L. Individual differences in reproductive tactics: Cuing, assessment and facultative strategies 105
Moffatt, C. A. & Nelson, R. J. May/December romance: Adaptive significance non probabilis est 106
Rajecki, D. W. & Rasmussen, J. L. Personal ads as deviant and unsatisfactory: Support for evolutionary hypotheses 107
Rushton, J. P. Age similarity is genetic similarity 108
Russell, P. A. The evolutionary model is synthetic not heuristic 108
Schoen, R. Marital choice and reproductive strategies 109
Simpson, J. A. Half a theory and half the data for half the people? 109
Sloman, S. A. & Sloman, L. What does evolution tell us about age preferences? 110
Stephan, W. G. Sexual motivation, patriarchy and compatibility 111
Stevens, G. Mortality and age-specific patterns of marriage 112

Symons, D. What do men want? 113
Thornhill, N. W. & Thornhill, P. A. A. The preferred age of a potential mate reflects evolved male sexual psychology 114
Townsend, J. M. Measuring the magnitude of sex differences 115
van den Berghe, P. L. Wanting and getting ain't the same 116
van Noordwijk, A. J. & Shykoff, J. A. Accounting for age preferences in sexual selection 117
Wallen, K. Evolutionary hypothesis testing: Consistency is not enough 118

Authors' Response

Kenrick, D. T. & Keefe, R. C. Sex differences in age preference: Universal reality or ephemeral construction? 119

Cheney, D. L. & Seyfarth, R. M. Précis of How monkeys see the world 135

Open Peer Commentary

Allen, C. Monkeys mind 147
Armstrong, D. M. Monkeys and consciousness 147
Baron-Cohen, S. How monkeys do things with "words" 148
Boesch, C. New elements of a theory of mind in wild chimpanzees 149
Burghardt, G. M. Looking inside monkey minds: Milestone or millstone 150
Cords, M. Social versus ecological intelligence 151
Dewsbury, D. A. Surplusage, audience effects and George John Romanes 152
Dittrich, W. H. Is the monkeys' world scientifically impenetrable? 152
Dugatkin, L. A. & Clark, A. B. Of monkeys, mechanisms and the modular mind 153
Figueredo, A. J. Animal mentality: Canons to the right of them, canons to the left of them . . . 154
Furth, H. G. Theory of society, yes, theory of mind, no 155
Galdikas, B. Social and nonsocial intelligence in orangutans 156
Glotzbach, P. A. Perception theory and the attribution of mental states 157
Gouzoules, H. In this best of all possible monkey worlds? 158
Happé, F. & Frith, U. How autistics see the world 159
Harcourt, A. H. "How monkeys see the world." Why monkeys? 160
Mealey, L. Are monkeys nomothetic or idiographic? 161
Noble, W. & Davidson, I. What are mental states? 162
Owings, D. H. Calls as labels: An intriguing theme, but one with limitations 162
Perloe, S. I. Exploring the "boundary" between the minds of monkeys and humans 163
Povinelli, D. J. & deBlois, S. On (not) attributing mental states to monkeys: First, know thyself 164
Ridley, R. M. How do monkeys remember the world? 166
Schull, J. & Smith, J. D. Knowing thyself, knowing the other: They're not the same 166
Snowdon, C. T. The sounds of silence 167
Tomasello, M. Cognitive ethology comes of age 168
Visalberghi, E. Is lack of understanding of cause-effect relationships a suitable basis for interpreting monkeys' failures in attribution? 169
Whiten, A. Mind reading, pretence and imitation in monkeys and apes 170

Authors' Response

Cheney, D. L. & Seyfarth, R. M. Characterizing the mind of another species 172

Contents Volume 15:2 June 1992

Dennett, D. C. & Kinsbourne, M. Time and the observer: The where and when of consciousness in the brain 183

Open Peer Commentary

Antony, M. V. The where and when of what? 201
Aronson, J., Dietrich, E. & Way, E. Throwing the conscious baby out with the Cartesian bath water 202
Baars, B. J. & Fehling, M. Consciousness is associated with central as well as distributed processes 203
Block, N. Begging the question against phenomenal consciousness 205
Bridgeman, B. What is consciousness for, anyway? 206
Clark, A. Experiential facts? 207
Damasio, A. R. The selfless consciousness 208
Farah, M. J. The distributed pineal gland 209
Glymour, B., Grush, R., Hardcastle, V. G., Keeley, B., Ramsey, J., Shagrir, O. & Watson, E. The Cartesian Theater stance 209
Gregson, R. A. M. Nothing is instantaneous, even in sensation 210
Hurley, S. L. Some mistakes about consciousness and their motivation 211
Jeannerod, M. The where in the brain determines the when in the mind 212
Libet, B. Models of conscious timing and the experimental evidence 213
Lloyd, D. Toward an identity theory of consciousness 215
Lycan, W. G. UnCartesian materialism and Lockean introspection 216
McDermott, D. Little "me" 217
Reingold, E. M. Conscious versus unconscious processes: Are they qualitatively different? 218
Rollins, M. Content and conformation: Isomorphism in the neural sway 219
Rosenthal, D. M. Time and consciousness 220
Roskies, A. L. & Wood, C. C. Cinema 1-2-Many of the Mind 221
Shepard, R. N. Mental representation: Always delayed but not always ephemeral 223
Teghtsoonian, R. In defense of the pineal gland 224
Treisman, M. Does the perception of temporal sequence throw light on consciousness? 225
Van Gulick, R. Time for more alternatives 228
Velmans, M. Is consciousness integrated? 229
Warren, R. M. Global pattern perception and temporal order judgments 230
Wasserman, G. S. The psychoanatomy of consciousness: Neural integration occurs in single cells 232
Young, A. Closing the Cartesian Theatre 233

Editorial Commentary 233

Authors' Response

Dennett, D. C. & Kinsbourne, M. Escape from the Cartesian Theater 234

Golani, I. A mobility gradient in the organization of vertebrate movement: The perception of movement through symbolic language 249

Open Peer Commentary

Allen, C. Why Eshkol-Wachman behavioral notation is not enough 266
Barlow, G. W. Is the mobility gradient suitable for general application? 267
Beck, C. H. M. The environment modulates the mobility gradient, temporally if not sequentially 268
Bekoff, M. Description and explanation: A plea for plurality 269
Byers, J. A. The mobility gradient: Useful, general, falsifiable? 270
Cools, A. R. Striatal structures, dopamine and the mobility gradient model 271
Eaton, R. C. Eshkol-Wachman movement notation and the evolution of locomotor patterns in vertebrates 272
Eilam, D. The mobility gradient from a comparative phylogenetic perspective 274
Fagen, R. Moving beyond words 275
Faulkes, Z. & Paul, D. H. Connecting invertebrate behavior, neurophysiology and evolution with Eshkol-Wachman movement notation 276
Fentress, J. C. Alternative taxonomies in movement: Not only possible but critical 277
Goldberg, G. Dynamical systems theory and the mobility gradient: Information, homology and self-similar structure 278
Harries, J. G. Shapes of behaviour 279
Klopfer, P. H. Structure and function in the CNS 281
Leyhausen, P. Animal motility: Gestalt or piecemeal assembly? 282
Lyon, M. Somewhere in time – temporal factors in vertebrate movement analysis 282
MacKay, W. A. Joint torque precedes the kinematic end result 283
Masters, R. D. Time-based objective coding and human nonverbal behavior 284
Newtson, D. Human observation and human action 285
Pellis, S. M. The yin and yang of behavioral analysis 286
Powers, W. T. Testing for controlled variables 286
Rebec, G. V. From psychopharmacology to neuropsychopharmacology: Adapting behavioral terminology to neural events 287
Schleidt, W. M. Describing behavior: A new label for an old wine? 288
Thom, R. Sensorimotor reference frames and physiological attractors 289
Todt, D. & Hultsch, H. Birdsong: Variations that follow rules 289
Whishaw, I. Q. What are voluntary movements made of? 290

Author's Response

Golani, I. The natural geometry of a behavioral homology 291

Flanders, M., Helms Tillery, S. I. & Soechting, J. F. Early stages in a sensorimotor transformation 309

Open Peer Commentary

Alexander, G. E. For effective sensorimotor processing must there be explicit representations and reconciliation of differing frames of reference? 321
Arbib, M. A. Schemas, grasping, tensors and avoidance 322
Bennett, D. J. & Loeb, E. P. Apparent approximations in sensorimotor transformations are due to errors in pointing 323
Berkinblit, M., Fookson, O., Adamovich, S. & Poizner, H. Two paradoxes of pointing 324
Bloedel, J. R. Coordinate transformation and limb movements: There may be more complexity than meets the eye 326
Blouin, J., Teasdale, N., Bard, C. & Fleury, M. The mapping of visual space is a function of the structure of the visual field 326
Bookstein, F. L. Error analysis, regression and coordinate systems 327
Bracewell, R. M. Sensorimotor transformations for saccades in the primate posterior parietal cortex 329
Bullock, D., Greve, D. & Guenther, F. Do reaches in the dark shed sufficient light on internal representations? 330
Burnod, Y. & Caminiti, R. Cortical mechanisms of visuomotor transformations underlying arm movements to visual targets 332
Cruse, H. & Dean, J. What do pointing errors really tell us about internal coordinate transformations? 333
Gandevia, S. C. Kinesthesia and unique solutions for control of multijoint movements 335
Goodale, M. A. & Servos, P. Now you see it, now you don't: How delaying an action system can transform a theory 335
Gordon, J., Ghilardi, M. F. & Ghez, C. In reaching, the task is to move the hand to a target 337
Grobstein, P. Central spatial representations and mapping the sensorimotor interface: How early is early, how late is late, and what difference does it all make anyhow? 339
Hasan, Z. Are errors in final position destined before the movement begins? 341
Hayward, V. Physical modeling applies to physiology, too 342
Holding, D. H. Information decay during response delay 343
Kalish, M. Limitations on what reaching can tell us about sensorimotor transformations 344
Lacquaniti, F. Coordinate transformations in postural control 345
Massone, L. L. E. Coordinate transformations: Some basic questions 345
McCollum, G. Invariants of the second transformation expressed in activation ranges 346
Neilson, P. D. Coordinate transformations or dynamic models? 348
Ostry, D. J., Flanagan, J. R. & Sergio, L. E. Coordinate transformations in orofacial movements 348
Powers, W. T. S-O-R: Wrong model for pointing 349
Trevelyan, J. P. Approximations might lead to errors in brain science 350
Wann, J. Reaching the point where you have to move a head 351
Worringham, C. J. & Dennis, R. G. Distance errors: Pointing to the range effect 352
Zipser, D. Systematic, idiosyncratic reaching errors 353

Authors' Response

Soechting, J. F., Helms Tillery, S. I. & Flanders, M. In the dark about pointing: What's the point? 354

Thornhill, R. & Thornhill, N. W. The evolutionary psychology of men's coercive sexuality 363

Open Peer Commentary

Akins, K. A. & Windham, M. E. Just science? 376
Allgeier, E. R. & Wiederman, M. W. Evidence for an evolved adaptation to rape? Not yet 377
Archer, J. Mating tactics are complex and involve females too 379
Bayer, B. M. & Steele, R. S. The derealization of rape 380
Bixler, R. H. Men: A genetically invariant predisposition to rape? 381
Brownmiller, S. & Mehrhof, B. A feminist response to rape as an adaptation in men 381
Dupré, J. Blinded by "science": How not to think about social problems 382
Eibl-Eibesfeldt, I. Coercive sexuality and dominance 383
Figueredo, A. J. Does rape equal sex plus violence? 384
Freyd, J. J. & Johnson, J. Q. The evolutionary psychology of priesthood celibacy 385
Futterman, A. & Zirkel, S. Men are not born to rape 385
Gavey, N. J. & Gray, R. D. Rape: The perfect adaptationist story 386
Ghiselin, M. T. Genetics, functional anatomy and coercive behavior 388
Gladue, B. A. Evolution, biosocial behavior and coercive sexuality 388
Gowaty, P. A. What if within-sex variation is greater than between-sex variation? 389
Hartung, J. Getting real about rape 390
Kitcher, P. Loose associations 392
Langley, T. Empirical criteria for evaluating rape as an evolutionary phenomenon 393
Malamuth, N. M. Evolution and laboratory research on men's sexual arousal: What do the data show and how can we explain them? 394
Mazur, A. The evolutionary psychology of rape and food robbery 397
Mealey, L. Alternative adaptive models of rape 397
Palmer, C. T. Psychological mechanisms versus behavior: Does the difference really make a difference? 398
Pérusse, D. Specific versus general adaptations: Another unnecessary dichotomy? 399

Quinsey, V. L. Individual differences in the propensity to rape 400
Russell, P. A. Psychological adaptation: Alternatives and implications 401
Smuts, B. Psychological adaptations, development and individual differences 401
Voland, E. Selection for rape or selection for sexual opportunism? 402
Wilson, M. & Daly, M. What about the evolutionary psychology of coerciveness? 403

Authors' Response

Thornhill, R. & Thornhill, N. W. The study of men's coercive sexuality: What course should it take? 404

Errata

Greenfield, P. M. (1991) Language, tools and brain. BBS 14:531–595. 423

Velmans, M. (1991) Is human information processing conscious? BBS 14:651–726. 423

Contents Volume 15:3 September 1992

Allen Newell (1927–1992) Remarks in memoriam by Herbert A. Simon and Zenon W. Pylyshyn i

Newell, A. Précis of Unified theories of cognition 425

Open Peer Commentary

Bickerton, D. Unified cognitive theory: You can't get there from here 437
Card, S. K. Reframing the problem of intelligent behavior 438
Carlson, R. A. & Detweiler, M. A unified theory for psychologists? 440
Carroll, J. M. Toward unified cognitive theory: The path is well worn and the trenches are deep 441
Chipman, S. F. Re-membering cognition 441
Chown, E. & Kaplan, S. Active symbols, limited storage and the power of natural intelligence 442
Dodwell, P. C. Unified cognitive theory is not comprehensive 443
Frijda, N. H. & Elshout, J. Is Unified theories of cognition good strategy? 445
Goldfarb, L. A cognitive theory without inductive learning 446
Hunt, E. & Luce, R. D. SOAR as a world view, not a theory 447
LaPolla, M. V. & Baars, B. J. A psychologically implausible architecture that is always conscious, always active 448
Lewandowsky, S. Unified cognitive theory: Having one's apple pie and eating it 449
Michon, J. A. Unifying cognition: Has it all been put together? 450
Pléh, C. Unified cognition misses language 451
Proctor, R. W. & Dutta, A. Unified theories must explain the codependencies among perception, cognition and action 453
Quiatt, D. Unified psychobiological theory 454
Remington, R. W., Shafto, M. G. & Seifert, C. M. How human is SOAR? 455
Schleidt, W. Does the evolutionary perspective offer more than constraints? 456
Shultz, T. R. Choosing a unifying theory for cognitive development 456
Suppes, P. Problem spaces, language and connectionism: Issues for cognition 457
Townsend, J. T. Unified theories and theories that mimic each other's predictions 458
Uttal, W. R. On models and mechanisms 459
Vere, S. A. A cognitive process shell 460
Vicente, K. J. & Kirlik, A. On putting the cart before the horse: Taking perception seriously in unified theories of cognition 461
Wetherick, N. E. Cognition and simulation 462
Winston, M. E. Cartesian vs. Newtonian research strategies for cognitive science 463

Author's Response

Newell, A. SOAR as a unified theory of cognition: Issues and explanations 464

Kraemer, G. W. A psychobiological theory of attachment 493

Open Peer Commentary

Boccia, M. L. Refining the attachment model 511
Capitanio, J. P. What do attachment objects afford? 512
Eiserer, L. A. Levels of explanation in theories of infant attachment 513
Ellis, H. D. A wise child: Face perception by human neonates 514
Freedman, D. G. The many levels of attachment 515
Insel, T. R. Oxytocin and the neurobiology of attachment 515
Jacobs, B. & Raleigh, M. J. Attachment: How early, how far? 517
Kagan, J. The meanings of attachment 517
Kovach, J. K. Attachment and the sources of behavioral pathology 518
Mason, W. A. Does function imply structure? 519
Nemeroff, C. B. & Goodman, S. H. A new psychobiological theory of attachment: Primum non nocere 520
Pérusse, D. Attachment: A view from evolutionary biology and behavior genetics 521
Salzen, E. A. Behavioural, aminergic and neural systems in attachment 522
Sigman, M. & Siegel, D. J. The interface between the psychobiological and cognitive models of attachment 523
Svensson, T. H. A psychopharmacologist's view of attachment 524
Trevarthen, C. Emotions of human infants and mothers and development of the brain 524

Author's Response

Kraemer, G. W. Psychobiological attachment theory (PAT) and psychopathology 525

Lockhead, G. R. Psychophysical scaling: Judgments of attributes or objects? 543

Open Peer Commentary

Algom, D. Perception, apperception and psychophysics 558

Anderson, N. H. Integration psychophysics is not traditional psychophysics 559

Bolanowski, S. J. Lockhead's view of scaling: Something's fishy here 560

Bonnet, C. Psychophysical scaling within an information processing approach? 560

Borg, G. Psychophysical scaling: To describe relations or to uncover a law? 561

Brysbaert, M. Accounting for an old inconsistency in the psychophysics of Plateau and Delboeuf 562

Coren, S. Psychophysical scaling: Context and illusion 563

Corwin, T. R. The determinants of perceived brightness are complicated, but not hopelessly so 564

Dzhafarov, E. N. Can brightness be related to luminance by a meaningful function? 565

Eisler, H. Psychophysical invariance, perceptual invariance and the physicalistic trap 566

Gescheider, G. A. The complexity and importance of the psychophysical scaling of sensory attributes 567

Gregory, R. L. Scales falling from the eyes? 567

Gregson, R. A. M. Walking in a psychophysical dustbowl creates a dustcloud 568

Killeen, P. R. Psychophysics: Plus ça change . . . 569

King, D. L. Context effects: Pervasiveness and analysis 570

Krueger, L. E. Will the real stimulus please step forward? 570

Laming, D. Two categories of contextual variable in perception 572

Macmillan, N. A. Covert converging operations for multidimensional psychophysics 573

Marks, L. E. The perplexing plurality of psychophysical processes 574

Masin, S. C. Psychophysics and quantitative perceptual laws 575

Melara, R. D. How important are dimensions to perception? 576

Monahan, J. S. Attributes or objects: A paradigm shift in psychophysics 577

Niall, K. K. The evident object of inquiry 578

Norwich, K. H. Context effects in the entropic theory of perception 578

Schneider, B. Should the psychophysical model be rejected? 579

Teghtsoonian, R. Selecting one attribute for judgment is not an act of stupidity 580

Treisman, M. Do we scale "objects" or isolated sensory dimensions? 581

van Brakel, J. Ceteris paribus laws 584

Wagner, M. Keeping the bath water along with the baby: Context effects represent a challenge, not a mortal wound, to the body of psychophysics 585

Warren, R. M. Relation of sensory scales to physical scales 586

Author's Response

Lockhead, G. R. Constancy in a changing world 587

Corrigenda

Continuing Commentary: Everill, B. (1991) Humans' use of animals: On the horns of a moral dilemma. BBS 14:756. 601

MacKay, W. A. Consciousness is king of the neuronal processors. Commentary on Velmans, M. (1991) Is human information processing conscious? BBS 14:651–726. 601

Contents Volume 15:4 December 1992

Cordo, P. & Gurfinkel, V. Controversies in neuroscience I: Movement control iii

Bizzi, E., Hogan, N., Mussa-Ivaldi, F. A. & Giszter, S. Does the nervous system use equilibrium-point control to guide single and multiple joint movements? 603

Gandevia, S. C. & Burke, D. Does the nervous system depend on kinesthetic information to control natural limb movements? 614

McCrea, D. A. Can sense be made of spinal interneuron circuits? 633

Robinson, D. A. Implications of neural networks for how we think about brain function 644

Alexander, G. E., DeLong, M. R. & Crutcher, M. D. Do cortical and basal ganglionic motor areas use "motor programs" to control movement? 656

Bloedel, J. R. Functional heterogeneity with structural homogeneity: How does the cerebellum operate? 666

Fetz, E. E. Are movement parameters recognizably coded in the activity of single neurons? 679

Stein, J. F. The representation of egocentric space in the posterior parietal cortex 691

Open Peer Commentary

Adamovich, S. V. How does the nervous system control the equilibrium trajectory? 704

Agarwal, G. C. Movement control hypotheses: A lesson from history 705

Alexander, G. E. Neurophysiology of motor systems: Coming to grips with connectionism 706

Andersen, R. A. & Brotchie, P. R. Spatial maps versus distributed representations 707

Barmack, N. H., Errico, P. & Fagerson, M. Microzones, topographic maps and cerebellar "operations" 709

Berkinblit, M. B., Sidorova, V. Y., Smetanin, B. N. & Tkach, T. V. Afferent influence on central generators and the integration of proprioceptive input with afferent input from other modalities 709

Beuter, A. Modulation of kinesthetic information can be explored with nonlinear dynamics 711

Bischof, H. & Pinz, A. J. Artificial versus real neural networks 712

Borrett, D. S., Yeap, T. H. & Kwan, H. C. The nonlinear dynamics of connectionist networks: The basis of motor control 712

Bossut, D. F. Implication of neural networks for how we think about brain function 714

Bower, J. M. Is the cerebellum a motor control device? 714

Braitenberg, V. & Preissl, H. Why is the output of the cerebellum inhibitory? 715

Bridgeman, B. Taking distributed coding seriously 717

Bullock, D. & Contreras-Vidal, J. L. Adaptive behavioral phenotypes enabled by spinal interneuron circuits: Making sense the Darwinian way 717

Burgess, P. R. Equilibrium points and sensory templates 720

Burke, D. Movement programs in the spinal cord 722

Carey, D. P. & Servos, P. Is "attention" necessary for visuomotor transformations? 723

Cavallari, P. From neuron to hypothesis 723

Cavanagh, P. R., Simoneau, G. G. & Ulbrecht, J. S. Posture and gait in diabetic distal symmetrical polyneuropathy 724

Clark, F. J. How accurately can we perceive the positions of our limbs? 725

Clarke, T. L. Mathematics is a useful guide to brain function 726

Colby, C. L., Duhamel, J-R. & Goldberg, M. E. Posterior parietal cortex and retinocentric space 727

Connolly, C. I. A robotics perspective on motor programs and path planning 728

Cordo, P. J. & Bevan, L. Successive approximation in targeted movement: An alternative hypothesis 729

Dawson, M. R. W. FINSTs, tag-assignment and the parietal gazetteer 730

Dean, J. Is equilibrium-point control all there is to coding movement and do insects do it, too? 731

Dietz, V. Control of natural movements: Interaction of various neuronal mechanisms 732

Duysens, J. & Gielen, C. C. A. M. Spinal integration: From reflexes to perception 733

Eagleson, R. & Carey, D. P. Connectionist networks do not model brain function 734

Feldman, A. G. Fundamentals of motor control, kinesthesia and spinal neurons: In search of a theory 735

Flanders, M. & Soechting, J. F. Network magic 738

Frolov, A. A. & Biryukova, E. V. Adaptive neural networks organize muscular activity to generate equilibrium trajectories 739

Fuchs, A. F., Ling, L., Kaneko, C. R. S. & Robinson, F. R. Network simulations and single-neuron behavior: The case for keeping the bath water 740

Fuster, J. M. Brain systems have a way of reconciling "opposite" views of neural processing; the motor system is no exception 741

Gandevia, S. C. How complex is a simple arm movement? 743

Gilbert, P. F. C. & Yeo, C. H. Cerebellar function: On-line control and learning 743

Giszter, S. Spinal movement primitives and motor programs: A necessary concept for motor control 744

Gnadt, J. W. Area LIP: Three-dimensional space and visual to oculomotor transformation 745

Goodale, M. A. & Jakobson, L. S. Action systems in the posterior parietal cortex 747

Gordon, A. M. & Inhoff, A. W. Intermittent use of feedback during movement phase transitions and during the updating of internal models 748

Gottlieb, G. L. Kinematics is only a (good) start 749

Graziano, M. S. & Gross, C. G. Somatotopically organized maps of near visual space exist 750

Grobstein, P. Information processing styles and strategies: Directed movement, neural networks, space and individuality 750

Gutman, S. R. & Gottlieb, G. L. Virtual trajectory as a solution of the inverse dynamic problem 752
Hallett, M. Operations of the motor system 754
Hamm, T. M. & McCurdy, M. L. Making sense of recurrent inhibition: Comparisons of circuit organization with function 756
Hasan, Z. Is stiffness the mainspring of posture and movement? 756
Heuer, H. Computations, neural networks and the limits of human understanding 758
Horak, F. B., Shupert, C. & Burleigh, A. Implications for human motor control 758
Iansek, R. Converging approaches to the problem of single-cell recording 760
Ingle, D. Spatial short-term memory: Evolutionary perspectives and discoveries from split-brain studies 760
Ioffe, M. E. The necessity of a complex approach in studying brain mechanisms of movement 762
Ito, M. Function versus synapse: Still a missing link? 763
Jaeger, D. Toward an integration of neurophysiology, performance analysis, connectionism and compartmental modeling 763
Kalaska, J. F. & Crammond, D. J. Neurophysiological mechanisms for the planning of movement and for spatial representations 764
Kirkwood, P. A. The identification of corticomotoneuronal connections 766
Kuo, A. D. & Zajac, F. E. What is the nature of the feedforward component in motor control? 767
Kupfermann, I. Neural networks: They do not have to be complex to be complex 767
Lacquaniti, F. Reflex control of mechanical interaction in man 768
Lan, N. & Crago, P. E. Equilibrium-point hypothesis, minimum effort control strategy and the triphasic muscle activation pattern 769
Latash, M. L. Are we able to preserve a motor command in the changing environment? 771
Lemon, R. The meaning for movement of activity in single cortical output neurons 773
Levine, D. S. Toward a genuine theoretical neuroscience of motor control 774
Loeb, G. E. Past the equilibrium point 774
Lundberg, A. To what extent are brain commands for movements mediated by spinal interneurones? 775
MacKay, W. A. & Riehle, A. The single neuron is not for hiding 776
Masson, G. & Pailhous, J. Locomotion, oscillating dynamic systems and stiffness regulation by the basal ganglia 778
McCollum, G. Global organizations: Movement and spinal 779
Morasso, P. & Sanguineti, V. Equilibrium point and self-organization 781
Neilson, P. D. & Neilson, M. D. Adaptive model theory 782
Nichols, T. R. Stiffness regulation revisited 783
Ostry, D. J. & Flanagan, J. R. Aspects of the equilibrium-point hypothesis (λ model) for multijoint movements 784
Paillard, J. Between perception and reflex: A role for contextual kinaesthetic information 786
Phillips, J. G., Jones, D. L., Bradshaw, J. L. & Iansek, R. Levels of explanation and other available clinical models for motor theory 787
Pouget, A. & Sejnowski, T. J. A distributed common reference frame for egocentric space in the posterior parietal cortex 787
Pratt, C. A. & Macpherson, J. M. The many disguises of "sense": The need for multitask studies of multiarticular movements 788
Prochazka, A. A vital clue: Kinesthetic input is greatly enhanced in sensorimotor "vigilance" 789
Proctor, R. W. & Franz, E. A. Is the posterior parietal cortex the site for sensorimotor transformation? Cross-validation from studies of stimulus-response compatibility 790
Quinlan, P. Real space in the head? 791
Rager, J. E. There is much information in neural network unit activations 792
Ross, H. E. Command signals and the perception of force, weight and mass 793
Rudomin, P. Presynaptic inhibition and information transmission in neuronal populations 793
Schieppati, M. Selection of task-related motor output through spinal interneurones 794
Schwarz, G. & Pouget, A. Signals, brains and explanation 795
Seltzer, B. An anatomy of parallel distributed processing 796
Smeets, J. B. J. What do fast goal-directed movements teach us about equilibrium-point control? 796
Smith, A. M. Can the inferior olive both excite and inhibit Purkinje cells? 797
Stein, J. F. The role of the cerebellum in calibrating feedforward control 798
Stein, R. B. Varying the invariants of movement 799
Summers, J. J. The demise of the motor program 800
Tanji, J. Cortical area-specific activity not yet found? 800
Thompson, R. F. The cerebellum and memory 801
Tsuda, I. Nonlinear dynamical systems theory and engineering neural network: Can each afford plausible interpretation of "how" and "what"? 802
Van Gisbergen, J. A. M. & Duysens, J. Coordinate transformations in sensorimotor control: Persisting issues 803
Van Ingen Schenau, G. J., Beek, P. J. & Bootsma, R. J. Is position information alone sufficient for the control of external forces? 804
Winters, J. M. & Mullins, P. Synthesized neural/biochemical models used for realistic 3-D tasks are more likely to provide answers 805

Authors' Responses

Bizzi, E., Hogan, N., Mussa-Ivaldi, F. A. & Giszter, S. The equilibrium-point framework: A point of departure 808
Gandevia, S. C. & Burke, D. Afferent feedback, central programming and motor commands 815
McCrea, D. A. Spinal interneuronal connections: Out of the dark comes a ray of hope 819
Robinson, D. A. How far into brain function can neural networks take us? 823
Alexander, G. E., DeLong, M. R. & Crutcher, M. D. Naturalizing motor control theory: Isn't it time for a new paradigm? 828
Bloedel, J. R. Concepts of cerebellar integration: Still more questions than answers 833
Fetz, E. E. Saving the baby: Toward a meaningful reincarnation of single-unit data 838
Stein, J. F. Real spatial maps? 842